AN IMPORTANT LAND DEAL.

The Foster Ranch Leased to St. Vincent Asylum.

Two Shooting Scrapes—Meeting of Town Trustees—Martin gets Fourteen Years.

A few years ago A. W. Foster of San Rafael bought all the property around Hopland which had been owned by the late Mrs. J. E. Peck. Mr. Foster put a great deal of money into the place with the view making it a model stock farm. Other tracts were bought, good buildings and other substantial improvements constructed, and altogether great changes were wrought. And now comes the news that the property has been leased by the St. Vincent Orphan Asylum near San Rafael, with the privilege of purchasing. It is said that the Asylum is over crowded and the Catholics purpose to erect a branch asylum on the property if purchased. For the present it will be run as a stock farm and dairy as shown by the following clipping from The Breeder and Sportsman: J. A. McDonald, Superintendent of Asylum Stock Farm, near San Rafael, for a long time, has decided to strike out in the business of breeding first-class trotters for himself, and, with that object in view, has leased for a good term of years the Foster place, near Hopland, Cal. The ranch contains 2,000 acres of magnificent land, and it is claimed that a better spot could not have been selected in the entire State for the rearing of horses. Mr. McDonald has purchased of G. Valensin the great three-year-old colt Sid Fleet, who, last season as a two-year old, made a record of 2:26½ with only three weeks' work. This son of Sidney and Fleet will be the premier stallion on the McDonald farm. Already Mr. M. has secured about thirty royally-bred brood mares, and being a thorough horseman and excellent manager, should soon be in the front ranks of the breeders of trotting stock. On the ranch Mr. McDonald has leased there is a splendid dairy and creamery, while the stallion, broodmare and hay barns alone cost in the neighborhood of $50,000. Alfalfa grows luxuriantly in that section, and altogether the prospect is a beautiful one.

ORR'S HOT SPRINGS.

One of the Finest Summer Resorts in the State.

On last Sunday a PRESS representative visited these now famous springs, and found this ideal health resort in a flourishing condition. Mr. F. Weger, the manager and owner of the springs has lately added a new building to his hotel property. This structure is 38 feet high, three stories, and is 26 by 90 feet. It contains some twenty-six sleeping apartments. These rooms are furnished throughout with new furniture, neatly carpeted, etc., and are large and well ventilated. It is connected with the hotel by a bridge which spans the drive way, this making the two buildings one.

The medicinal properties and qualities of the springs are too well known to the public to be enumerated, but as a cure for rheumatism their equal has not yet been discovered. The action they have upon all skin diseases is remarkable.

For a week's outing no better place could be found. The table that Mr. Weger prepares is all that a person could desire, good wholesome food and the quantity unlimited being the rule.

The camping privileges that are afforded those who desire this mode of spending the warm months are unsurpassed, the beautiful mountain stream running as it does, through the redwood timber, and the grand mountain scenery, good hunting and fishing, makes it an ideal place for the camper.

Mr. Weger contemplates having a grand time out in his mountain retreat on the 5th of July.

Much Ado About Nothing.

About a month ago Daisy Alloway began suit for a divorce from her husband, C. F. Alloway, who was up north at the time. Last week Alloway came home. Sunday evening he went to the house of Ben Fish, his wife's father and with whom she lives, to see his child. He left the house about nine o'clock, went down town, and returned with a bottle of beer. He got into the house and apparently became possessed of the idea that his wife was in the room of a U. S. soldier named Adkins from the Presidio, who is spending part of a furlough of two months in town, and who lodges in the house. Without saying anything, Alloway walked up to the closet in which Adkins was getting his clothes and threw the bottle of beer at him. Adkins seized a shotgun which was nearat hand, and fired, but without intent to do any harm. For this Alloway had Adkins arrested and the examination came up Tuesday morning in Justice Sullivan's Court. After hearing the testimony of several witnesses, the case was dismissed on motion of District Attorney White.

Shooting Affray at Point Arena.

Henry Bowen, a brother-in-law of Sheriff Standley, was shot and mortally wounded at Point Arena last Sunday. The details that have reached us are very meagre. The shooting was done by a hotel-keeper named Johnson. Bowen had come out of Pat Turners' saloon; as he was walking past Johnson's place, he stepped out with a revolver and shot once. Bowen was placed in the care of physicians and the report here Monday evening was that he could not live. Why Johnson should have shot, no one can tell. It is supposed that they had had some previous misunderstanding. Johnson delivered himself up to the authorities. Doc Standley and wife left here Monday evening for Point Arena.

For Fourteen Years.

Martin, the forger of Fred Heldt's will, was found guilty by the jury as announced in last week's PRESS and brought up for sentence last Saturday morning. Before pronouncing judgement, Judge McGarvey referred to the peculiar circumstances of Heldt's death; he spoke of the improbability of such a cautious and prudent man as Heldt appointing as executor without bonds an entire stranger, a man so impecunious and irresponsible that the court had to appoint counsel for his defence. The court intimated that Martin knew too well when Heldt was to die. The sentence was fourteen years in the state prison at Folsom. He was taken below Sunday. By every one the sentence is approved and only regretted that it could not be longer. It is said that there is not a person in Fort Bragg that does not believe Martin to be guilty of the murder of Heldt.

Bjorman vs. Ft. Bragg Redwood Co.

In 1887, on account of a brake giving way, a car ran into the Fort Bragg mill and crushed the leg of an employe who was at work there. The injury necessitated the amputation of the limb. Bjorman, the injured man, brought suit against the company in 1888 for $30,000 damages and was awarded $7000 by the jury. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court and was remanded for a new trial. The case came up in the Superior Court of this county last week. The jury, after five minutes deliberation brought in a verdict last Saturday in favor of the Fort Bragg Redwood Co., the defendant. They could find no evidence to sustain the allegation that the accident was due to the negligence of the defendant or its employes, or to the insufficiency of its machinery and appliances.

Isbell's Denial.

In answer to Mr. C. Hoffman's article "To the Public" on the 17th inst, in denial of having any thing to do with the Wellman, Peck letter lately published by me, I would state that the public has already tried him and found him guilty and are daily passing sentence on him as my rapidly growing trade will show. Now in regard to my asking Mr. Hoffman to sell my flower at $1.50 a sack I most emphatically deny. He knows very well that I went to him and told him to sell my flour at $1.45 per sack. He said he sold Sperry's flour for $1.45. I then told him to sell mine at $1.40. That is all there is in the flour business. As to Mr. Hoffman holding out for my flour longer than any one else, he knows it is false as there are other merchants in Ukiah that would not handle outside flour of any kind much less try to break down a home mill by importing a cheap Chinese brand of flour that Digger Indians wont buy.

Respectfully,
WM. ISBELL.

New Opera House.

The remodeling of the Opera House is fast nearing completion, and Ukiah will have a building that she will justly be proud of. Since the burning of Reed's Hall some years ago we have virtually been without a place to hold public meetings, dances, a suitable place for the drama, etc.

Mr. S. Marks, the owner of the property realized the needs of our city and is having the old hall refitted by raising the ceiling so that it is now twenty feet high; the floor of the building has been widened to 40 feet and is 86 feet long. A large stage 40 by 25, has been constructed, complete with dressing rooms, scenery, etc. The whole building will be thoroughly ventilated. Some ten dozen new reserved seat chairs have been purchased and the structure will comfortably seat about 600 people. A large ladies' parlor has been put in the front of the building and also two large offices. Mr. Marks expects the work to be done by the middle of next month, but it will be in a condition to be used in a week or so.

Drowned in the Gualala.

County Clerk Juillard received a letter from Sea View Tuesday bearing the sad intelligence that on last Sunday T. J Irwin and Minor Brown, of Fisk's Mills, were drowned while bathing in the Gualala near Houser's bridge. It seems that Brown went into a deep hole and called to Irvin for help. Irvin hastened to the assistance of his imperiled friend and the latter grasped him in such a manner that he could not extricate himself, and both went to the bottom. The young men were well known and highly respected, and their untimely death will be sincerely mourned by the community.—Santa Rosa Democrat.

Shot Himself.

Last Wednesday Walter Linthicum was accidentally shot by his own pistol, which fell to the ground. It was discharged by the concussion, the ball entering his left leg above the ankle, and ranging up. Dr. Brown was called in and extracted it at the knee cap. The wound is a very bad one and has caused Linthicum much pain. The bullet, we should judge about a 45 caliber size, was deeply creased on one side, which was no doubt caused by coming in contact with the bone.—Advocate.

The Tent Meeting.

The Foster-Nesbit services continue with unabated interest. The following list of subjects will be handled during the next week.

1. Mistakes of the Multitude.
2. The Ten Commandments.
3. What is Truth.
4. The Beliefs of the Christian Church.
5. The Light of the World.
6. How can we Know our Sins are Forgiven?
7. The old Paths of our Fathers.

Thirty-one to date. The question box is creating a profound interest. Go and hear.

The Flag-pole.

The iron flag-pole for the top of the Court House was brought up last week and put together by J. H. Barker. It consists of three joints each twenty feet long. The bottom joint is six inches in diameter. When in place it will be forty feet above the gilded ball on the dome. The pole will be painted white and put in place before the Fourth of July. After everything is completed and the twenty-four foot flag is unfurled from the top the residents of the city will see something of which all may be proud.

Fatal Accident.

On Thursday, an employe of L. E. White, working at Rolling Brook, came to camp on the Garcia, two miles down to Garcia to have them shod. The mules were shod and Mr. Larson started back towards the camp. On the way, no one knows how it happened, but he was thrown from his saddle mule and killed.

This occured on the North Fork road, near the old picnic ground. The mule was found with the saddle turned and some distance away from the dead body of the unfortunate man.—Record.

Serious Accident.

John. O. Abley of Laytonville was coming with a load of wool last Friday morning when the frame of his wagon broke, the wagon overturned, falling on him and seriously injuring him. His wife and daughter were at Fresno and came up on Tuesday's train in response to a telegram giving them the sad news. The accident happened between Laytonville and Willits.

Broke His Leg.

Mark, a four year old son of Grant Carpenter, had his left leg broken last Friday evening at the home of his grand-father, A. O. Carpenter in this city. The child was playing with other children in the corral in which was a spirited horse and it is supposed was either kicked or stepped on. The injury is known as a compound comminuted fracture. The limb was set by Dr. Hudson and the little patient is reported to be getting along very nicely.

A Landmark Burned.

Last Wednesday word came to town of the burning of the Mountain House, a well known land mark on the Cloverdale and Ukiah road. Dick McDonald was residing there. The fire was caused by a defective flue in the kitchen. The house was a complete loss. The actual loss was over $3,000. Insured in the Home Mutual and to the amount of $1,800.—Reveille.

Wool Market.

Wool is coming into town for the sale Friday. Large quantities however have already been shipped. It is said that the greater part of the wool sold in Cloverdale this week brought 19 and 20 cents. The large shipments indicate a doubt on the part of many that these wool sales answer the purpose for which intended.

ONE PURE ARTICLE OF FOOD.

The Royal Baking Powder Officially Commended.

It is particularly gratifying to consummers to know that the baking powder which they have so long been accustomed to using, the Royal, has invariably gone through the official analysis out only without a reflection against it of impurity and unwholesomeness, but each time more emphatically endorsed as the superior of all the bakings powders of the market.

The health authorities of a number of States have recently made exhaustive examinations of this character, and with the uniform result of finding the Royal superior to all others. The United States Government Chemist, after an examination for the Indian Department, made the emphatic statement that "The Royal Baking Powder is the purest in quality and highest in strength of any baking powder of which I have knowledge." The authorities of Canada have been making an elaborate study of the baking powders sold there. The official analyst of Ontario says as the result of his investigation that he "finds the Royal Baking powder far superior to the others," and goes as far as to recommend its use in preference to any other. Likewise a series of over five hundred tests for strength made by public analysis and other chemists of prominence throughout the country show it to produce an average of twenty five per cent more leavening gas than any of its competitors.

A company that maintains this high standard for its product against the temptations of the enormously greater profit that would accrue from the use of the cheaper materials employed by others (for the alum baking powders are produced at a cost of three cents per pound) is entitled to this public commendation and endorsement.

Miss Blanche Thatcher, Alice Goods and Bell Long luckily escaped serious injury last Saturday afternoon at Largo. Peachland School.

Our school closed June 17th, after a term of four and one-half months.

The school house was beautifully decorated with ferns and flowers, and the exercises being in the evening, it was brilliantly lighted. The scholars did their best and all present pronounced it a success.

After a well rendered programme of songs, recitations, and compositions, all present were treated to cake, strawberries and cream. The strawberries which were grown on Mr. Geo. Wallace's place here in Peachland, by his daughter Hallie, were delicious and were provided in ample quantity by the teacher. The ladies provided the cake which was abundant and excellent.

The visitors were: Messrs. J. B. Sanders, Geo. W. Wallace, Jas. McNeill, Frank Moro, Don Whipple, Chas. Sanders, Clay Copsey, George Fraim, Tom Frye and Cleve Phelps. Mesdames J. B. Sanders, James McNeill and Addie Phelps. Misses Kate Duff, Daisy Sanders, Hallie Wallace, Violet and Ella M'Neill.

Poison.

We are in receipt of a circular letter from Prof. Hilgard of the State University warning the public against the use of what the makers choose to call "Compound Extract of Salyx" a nostrum to be used for preserving fruit. The name of the process is "The Ohio Fruit Co's. California Cold Process for Preserving Fruits, Vegetables and Liquids." We conclude with the following quotation from the circular: Doubtless there are persons who may for some time take such doses of the well known preservatives with impunity; there are others with whom its use would in a short time create very serious disorders of the digestion; and there are those whose digestion is stopped, point blank, when such "preserves" are eaten.

During the week it was found necessary to dig down and cut one of the mains of the city water system. Some person has circulated the report that the plumber found the pipe filled up with water dogs. The buggy was run into the bank throwing the occupants out. The horse then kicked loose from the buggy and ran home. The young ladies were bruised and cut somewhat, but consider themselves lucky in getting off without any serious injury.

If anybody desires to know who belongs to the merchant's combination against Isbell and his mill and also to the best interests of this county, just take a stroll around to the different stores in Ukiah and see who has the red printed flour sacks with the Chinese brand on it, "All Same Like Melican." This flour is made of damaged wheat and screenings expressly for the China trade and marked at only $1.60 a sack. ***

Only Once More.

Only once more, once more to hear you speak
One tender word of those you used of old!
From other lips come naught but tales thrice-told,
Waste of weak words, so sterile, bare and bleak,
That I would give the rest of my dull years
To hopeless silence if, within mine ears,
I could but hear the one voice I adore—
Only once more!

Only once more, once more to hold your hand,
Warm in my clasp, so dainty, soft and small,
To hold it fast and never let it fall
Save to my lips; to kiss the golden band
Upon the marriage finger . . . but I know
That dream is gone, as all sweet things must go—
But, O! if I could dream that one dream o'er
Only once more!

Only once more, once more to feel your breath
Blown fresh and fragrant full upon my face;
To press my lips against the creamy lace
Kissing your throat—ah, death would not be death
Coming so met!—or if I could but feel
Balm of your presence, like a cool wind, steal
Only once more!

Only once more, once more to clasp and keep
You, O, my love! my wan sweet love, who went
So far away that, while my strength is spent,
And all my soul is weary and would sleep,
I am no nearer than the first drear day—
I am no surer, and can only pray
For one dear hour of all the hours of yore,
Only once more!

—Frank Preston Smart.

A LUCKY MISTAKE.

Within a month after Fort Sumter was fired on, two young men from Pennsylvania enlisted in the Union army. These young men were twins, Tom and I. We were very much alike in size, feature, voice and manner—everything indeed, and the only persons who could always tell which was Tom, and which was I were the twins themselves. We did not join the same branch of the army, Tom enlisting in the cavalry, while I joined the secret service.

Af the investment of Vicksburg, and when the Union forces were each day digging nearer the city, I was sent to make an inspection of the Confederate fortifications.

I succeeded in passing the Confederate lines and entered the city of Vicksburg, where, dressed in civilian's clothes, I was reasonably free from suspicion. But it took me a full day before I secured the desired knowledge and started back towards the Union lines under cover of darkness.

I passed the guard safely and was perhaps a third of the way to camp, when I heard a sharp "Halt! who goes there?" accompanied by the click of cocking weapons.

Escape was out of the question, and a moment later I was a prisoner.

"Which camp do you belong to?" queried the leader of the men who had captured me.

"Neither," I answered, "but I am staying at Vicksburg."

"How came you so far from the lines to-night?"

"I was just wandering around and thought I would go until I reached the outer guard," I answered.

"This is very strange—if true," said my questioner, turning to his comrades; "but probably it is all a lie." Then to me: "We will just take you into camp and sift that yarn of yours."

The yarn sifted so poorly that I was convicted as a spy and sentenced to death.

One day after my conviction some young ladies of the city visited the prison where the Yankees were confined, some to see the strange animals of the north, who they believed had "horns and hoofs like an elephant," as one of the young women expressed it; others to leave flowers or fruit for the unhappy prisoners. The number of the latter class was small.

As a condemned spy I was an object of especial hatred or commiseration, according to the feelings of the fair visitors.

"Is he really a spy?" asked one young girl of gushing class and age.

"Yes," answered the guard, "he is a genuine Yankee spy."

"Oh, isn't it awful!" said the girl. "How can you tell? He doesn't look like a spy, and if you badn't told me I should say he was real nice."

"You can't tell anything by looks," replied the guard. "Some of the brightest and handsomest men in the service are spies. This 'un looks well enough, but he is a sneaking spy, just the same."

"How strange. And what do these dreadful spies do? What did this one do?"

"He came to look over our fortifications so he could tell the Yanks where it would be easiest to break through them and capture the city."

"Oh, dear! you don't think the Yankees will capture Vicksburg, do you? If they should they would kill us all, wouldn't they? Oh, how dreadfully awful it would be."

"I don't think they will ever take the city; it is too well fortified and too strongly defended."

My attention was soon attracted to three young ladies who were distributing handsome little bouquets to some of the prisoners, whom they appeared to know, and I was surprised to see the horrified stare which followed one young girl's first glance at me. She looked a second time, searchingly, her face pale and startled, then turned away with her companions.

The next day she came back again, bringing flowers, and I had a chance to watch her for some moments. She brought me a small bouquet, and when handing it to me accompanied it by a glance apparently full of meaning, and yet utterly bewildering and untranslatable.

"Surely," I thought, "I have never seen her before. Not a look or question, or movement is familiar. And yet she appears to recognize me."

The more I thought on the subject the deeper and blinder was my mystification, the more surprising the action of my beautiful friend.

I watched my charming mystery-builder until she had given me the bouquet. I gave it a close examination. Hidden among the leaves of one of the flowers was a very small note, the paper being almost as delicate as the tissues of flower leaves. The note said:

"Dear Tom: I was so startled and horror-struck to see you yesterday that I almost betrayed the fact that I recognized you. Fortunately I did not, and now I will try and help you. Examine carefully everything I bring; it may have something useful. Agnes is already almost ill, and I have not dared to tell her. Mabel."

Evidently the young lady thought I was somebody else.

A guard came to my cell after she left and said:

"I saw you were one of the favored ones to-day."

"Yes," I replied; "who is the lady?"

"Miss Murfree—Mabel Murfree."

"Her home is in Vicksburg, I presume?"

"No, Judge Murfree, her father, lived outside, and his plantation was for several weeks in possession of the Yankees. Finally he came here to be in a safe place and brought his daughters along."

The next day Miss Murfree came again, and when she reached my cell she handed me another bouquet.

I waited until I was free from observation, then examined my bouquet. In the hollow stalks of the flowers was a very small file, a slender but strong steel bar with a sharp point, and a little platinum hydrofloric acid. The flowers had been carefully sealed up at the bottom to prevent their contents from falling out. Besides the tools for escape was this note:

"Dear Tom: To-morrow I will try and find out the password from a young officer who visits us. Mabel."

I awaited the result of her effort with painful interest, and when she came the following day and gave me the usual bouquet I found the following note:

"My Dear Tom: The password to-night is 'Cartridge.' If you get out, go to the corner this side of the flag staff which you can see from your window, and give a low whistle. A colored man will come from the basement of the tall building on the right and address you as 'Massa Tom.' Follow him and I think you will be safe. May God help you to escape. Mabel."

The night proved an auspicious one for my purpose. It was very dark and a heavy thunderstorm shook the old jail, so that no amount of filing or prying could be heard. With the acid and the tools I made short work of the bars across my window and of the irons which fettered my limbs.

I squeezed through the window and dropped to the ground.

I had not gone far when a guard called out sharply, "Halt! who goes there?"

"A friend," I answered.

"Give the countersign!"

"Cartridge."

"Pass on."

On reaching the corner I whistled softly, and in answer a negro came up and said interrogatively, "Massa Tom?"

"Yes," I replied.

He threw a long cloak over my shoulders, and started up the street at a sharp gait. I followed him perhaps half a mile, when he stopped before a plain brick house, unlocked the door and bade me enter. I had scarcely glanced around the dimly-lighted hall before the mysterious "Mabel," accompanied by a young lady taller and darker than herself, hurriedly entered from an adjoining room. They had evidently been waiting for me.

I only heard my benefactress say: "Oh, Tom, thank heaven!" before her companion, with a wholly glad and half hysterical cry, threw her arms about my neck and showered tears and kisses upon me in most embarrassing profusion.

I was utterly dumbfounded. Finally, collecting my thoughts, I turned from the excited and half-crying woman I held in my arms to the one I partly knew, and said:

"My dear Miss Murfree, you have saved my life, and I am bound, as an honorable man, to tell you that you have made a strange mistake in thinking you know me!"

"Mistake!" gasped the young lady who had so passionately caressed me. "Mistake! What do you mean? Are you not Tom Atherton?"

"Not quite," I answered; "but if you thought I was he, the mistake is not a very bad one. I am his twin brother Ned."

The surprise and confusion which had overwhelmed me were transferred to the young ladies, and for a moment we all simply stared at each other. Then Mabel laughed and said:

"And so you are that wonderful brother of whom Tom used to tell us."

"Yes, fortunately," I answered.

"And you stood there and let me kiss you without saying a word," Agnes (I found out afterward she was Agnes) said reproachfully.

"You didn't give time to object, even if I had wished to," was my perfectly truthful reply.

"I don't know but that is so," she assented. "But Mabel, what shall we do with him?"

"I am entirely in your hands, and will do whatever you wish," I said. "If my being here will endanger you in any way I will try and get through the lines to-night."

"You will be much safer here," Mabel said. "We owe it to you to do whatever we can for you."

"Owe it to me," I said, "for what?"

"For your brother's sake. He saved my sister's life and protected our property from destruction and us from insult. He is the best and truest man that ever lived, and we can not do too much for his brother."

I was compelled to keep a dark retreat only a part of the time, and several hours each day were spent with Judge Murfree or his daughters.

Mabel Murfree had saved my life, and the gratitude I felt was perhaps enhanced by the fact that she was a rarely beautiful woman.

After weary weeks of siege the city was captured and the soldiers of Grant and Sherman entered in triumph and I was free.

When the time came for me to go, having said good-bye to Judge Murfree, I went to the parlor to see Mabel and Agnes, feeling how hard, how very hard it was to say farewell; and when I saw Mabel dressed in pure white, with white flowers in her beautiful hair, her cheeks flushed with excitement and her deep blue eyes unwontedly bright, the duty was not made any easier.

"Agnes is writing a letter to Tom for you to deliver," she said, as I entered the room. "She will be down in a few moments."

"I am quite willing to wait," I replied, "and indeed I am sorry that I must go at all. I do not expect to ever again find such friends as I have found here."

"You must thank your brother for them," Mabel answered.

"Miss Murfree. Mabel. you wish to rob your act of saving my life of any personal significance; you do not want me to be misled by the gift of my poor life to ask for that which can make it valuable. I refuse to be warned. I love you, Mabel—I love you madly, hopelessly—love you as I never thought to love any one, and while I dare not hope that you will return my love I could not leave you without speaking. Forgive me if I have pained you, but it was impossible for me to go away without telling my love, and you will at least be fortunate in the fact that an opportunity will not soon occur for you to be troubled again by one whose love was stronger than his fear of offending."

Tears trickled through the long dark lashes, then half smiling through her tears she lifted her brave, clear eyes to mine and said:

"And what if I insist on your remaining to repeat your offense?"—H. F. Marsh.

THEY TOIL WHILE OTHERS SLEEP.

The Vast Army of Busy City People Who Work at Night.

Did you ever stand at Clark and Madison streets after midnight? Have you any idea of the number of persons who look upon midnight as the world in general does upon noon? It is a vast army that toils while others sleep—and it keeps busy a great number of attendants.

For the benefit of the great number of night workers dozens of stores are kept open nights—restaurants, drug stores, barber shops and saloons. Of course, these are not patronized exclusively by the all-night workers. They catch the transient trade of that big community that loves to roam about when other folks are in bed.

It is a queer community—this night crowd. First comes the actor fresh from his night's labors. He may deserve to be classed with the night-worker, though he disappears at 1 or 2 o'clock. The men of the boards are followed by the men of the tables—the waiters of the big down-town restaurants which close between 12 and 1. By the time these are well on their way home comes the first phalanx of the newspaper brigade—the "day" reporters for the morning papers. These linger a little and give way to the first batch of printers. The printers straggle along all through the night, for they get off in gangs—increasing as the night advances. With them, too, comes a portion of the night editorial force—the men who have remained after the departure of the reporters to edit the work of the latter.

These all gather by ones and twos until by 4 o'clock, when the night reporters cease their labors, the throng of printers, of editors, of reporters, is a great one. They are lovers of gossip and good-fellowship and gather in the various down-town resorts to break bread or sip a social glass previous to a tedious journey in a horse-car. These cars, by the way, are run for the benefit of the many night-workers.

Then comes the crowd of night ramblers — men-about-town, gamblers, thugs, drunks and people who attend dances. All these furnish a living to the fruit venders, "hot-tomale" and "red hot" men, etc., as well as the storekeeper.

The vast multitude of early risers—the dinner-pail brigade—are hurrying to their places of daily labor when the last of the night-workers leave for home. These are the newspaper stereotypers and pressmen, the bakers, the telephone girls and those who work in the all-night stores.—Chicago Tribune.

THE MULE NOW LIVES IN CLOVER.

He Found a Gold Mine and Made His Owner a Millionaire.

The luck of Jim Wardner is the talk of thousands of people up and down the Pacific coast. A mule found a mine and made a fortune for him. Wardner has been a wanderer in many lands. He has tried farming, freighting, raising oranges at San Bernardino, buying stocks in Pine street, and enough other things to make one's head swim to remember them. He is known as a good deal of a plunger; and has been rich and poor many times.

It was the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mine, superintended by John Hayes Hammond, that the mule found. Wardner had wandered with the first of the adventurous prospectors to the Cœur d'Alene country. For many months the snow lay deep upon the ground. He and his partners were camped in a gorge in the mountains, prospecting as best they could. They had a big brown mule named Jack to carry their bacon and beans and picks around. One day, after the mule had extracted all the food that could be found in the tomato cans and other rubbish, he wandered off to browse on some sage-brush just peeping up from the snow.

In getting at the sage-brush he slipped on the hillside and displaced a stone and some loose dirt under it, and there lay the ore of the outcropping of the great vein of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mine, worth millions of dollars.

A town sprang up—the now well-known town of Wardner, Idaho, where a number of other rich mines have since been discovered—and Lucky Jim Wardner, as he is now known, was transformed in a day from a moneyless prospector to a millionaire.

"We were drinking beer in the camp," said he, "and were all satisfied to get it, but when we had struck the ore we quarreled about the quality of the champagne. It was strange what epicures we became right away."

The aged mule which had made the fortune was feted as mule never was before. He was taken to Corvallis, in the Willamette Valley, and put in luxuriant grass up to his thighs. A man was hired to take care of him and supply his smallest want. A luxurious barn was fitted up and a regular allowance made for him by Wardner and others he had benefited. Jack is now whiling his last hours away in luxury. Many people call to see him. He has the strangest history, perhaps, of any mule that ever lived.

Wardner has for some time been a bank president, and is now known as the Hon. James F. Wardner, but to a myriad of people he will always be known as plain, unostentatious, and lucky Jim Wardner.

A Literary Cab-Driver.

I was very much amused at a little incident with a Boston cabman, I asked him to drive me to a number in Mount Vernon street. Upon reaching there the "cabbie," holding the door of the cab open, heard me ask the servant who was sweeping the sidewalk whether Mrs. Deland was at home. Being answered in the negative, I told my driver to go to the next address.

As I was dismissing him at the close of the day he said to me:

"Excuse me, sir, but at the address in Mount Vernon street to which we drove I heard you ask for a Mrs. Deland. Is it the author of 'John Ward, Preacher,' who lives there?"

"Yes," I replied; "but why? Do you know her?"

"No, sir, but I have read her book."

"You have?" I exclaimed, getting interested.

"Yes, sir, I have also read her last one, 'Sidney,' but I didn't like that as well as I did 'John Ward, Preacher.'"

This was a surprise! A literary cab-driver.

"Why, when do you find time to read?" I asked.

"In the evening, after I put my horse up, I live with my mother and sister, and, being all fond of books, we read aloud to each other. We read quite a deal. I have read everything, I think, written by the poet to whose house we drove this afternoon—Dr. Holmes."

By this time I was simply astounded.

"Well," I said, "you're a regular literary man. You have never written yourself, I suppose?" I ventured.

"Not much, sir. Two or three pieces," came the quick reply.

"Prose or poetry?" I asked.

"Oh, prose, sir. I never tried poetry. I had two articles and a story printed in the papers here. Then I began to read Herbert Spencer, and I wrote an article of my impressions of his philosophy. But I couldn't get it published, and I got discouraged. And I don't know but that cab-driving is about as lucrative as writing—to me, at least," he said, as he mounted his box, bade me good-night and drove off.

And I was dumbfounded! A cab-driver reading Herbert Spencer and then writing about him!

Talk about literary Boston! Great Caesar!—E. W. Bok, in Boston Journal.

Not the Bodily Hurt.

Reclining then upon the pretty white couch in the hospital she wept softly but copiously. She was a demure little lady with a face not handsome but decidedly interesting and a wealth of wavy auburn hair crowning her shapely head in an aureole of glory. The comely locks were disordered now, the cheeks were pale and the lips ashy as with fright. There had been a runaway and she was borne thither with a sprained ankle.

"How d-dr-dreadful," she sobbed.

A gentle nurse sought to soothe her.

"You'll be all right in a few days," pleaded the attendant.

"Boo-hoo."

"It might have been worse."

"N-n-n-never. Boo-oo-oo."

The pillow became quite wet with tears, yet the grief showed no sign of abating.

"Poor dear," murmured the nurse, "the shock must have been awful."

"Boo-hoo,"

"But you really must calm yourself."

"I c-c-can't."

"But your injury is nothing."

"I don't c-c—boo-oo—c-care f-for that."

The moisture on the pillow was rendered even more pronounced in character.

A Humble Christian.

Some very good Christians fail to carry out the scriptural injunction of turning the other cheek. When they are reviled they revile back with considerable bitterness. An old negro named Uncle Nace keeps a little fruit stand on Austin avenue. He is a deacon in the Austin Blue Light tabernacle, and when camp-meetings are epidemic his voice can be heard so plainly by the inmates of the deaf and dumb asylum on the opposite bank of the Colorado river, two miles distant, that they suffer from insomnia. Approaching Uncle Nace's fruit stand Gilhooly said:

"Do you believe in the Bible, Uncle Nace?"

"I'se been a humble follerer ob de Lawd more den fifty yeahs, sah."

"If you believe in the Bible I suppose you admit that a man is judged by his fruits?"

"Certainly, sah."

"If men are judged by their fruits, what kind of a man art thou?" asked Gilhooly, picking up an orange on the lower side of which was a large decayed spot, to which he called the old man's attention.

The kick this humble praying old Christian discharged at Gilhooly made a hole in the awning five feet over his head, and the language he used would have done credit to a deputy sheriff.

An inexplicable habit in a church at Valsbol has at last been explained. When the men went to the altar to receive the sacrament and then returned to the body of the church each made a genuflection in the direction of the women, always on the same spot. No one for a long while had known why this was done. Lately one of the walls of the church was being cleaned and a picture of the Virgin was discovered, which had been covered up for four hundred years by the whitewash. The genuflections originally made to this picture had been continued by the force of habit for centuries after it had disappeared.

A Lawyer Pressed the Button.

A New York lawyer who was on a sleeping car the other night unwittingly caused something of a stir among his fellow-passengers. Every one had gone to sleep, and nothing arose to disturb the slumbers of the travelers until about 3 a. m. Then the bell in the porter's room began to ring. It was one of those rings which settle down to hard work at once and, as they say, just do nothing but saw wood. It was a steady, perfectly contented ring. Soon it became apparent that it was no sprinter, but a long-distance champion, for it rang and rang, as only an electric bell can ring to wreck men's nerves. Some one in the end of the car wakened and groaned:

"For heaven's sake, stop that racket! If you want the porter go out and get him. Don't wake the whole car up."

But the ringing continued.

"Stop that ringing!" bawled a full-lunged man, sticking his head out between the curtains and glaring savagely at the little man.

A baby woke up and began to howl. Its mother tried to calm it and its father swore like a trooper. He threatened to have the life of the man who was making that "infernal noise," and the bell blazed away as merrily as if it were a twenty-four-hour alarm clock.

Everybody in the car awakened except two people—the porter and the New York lawyer. Then a delegation started to the porter's room to assassinate him. They found him dozing peacefully on a seat while the bell was now carrying on its work with the regularity of a patented circular saw warranted never to stop. The wrathful passengers decided that before they cut the porter's throat it would be wise to have him stop that bell. They pulled him to his feet and shouted in his ear and when he opened his eyes they yelled:

"Bell! Stop the bell! Stop that bell!"

The porter went down to the lawyer's berth and stuck his head between the curtains.

"Did you ring, sah?" he asked. There was no answer from the lawyer, though the bell kept up its ringing, while the baby ran a rival noise-making factory and its angry father invented magnificent swear words.

"Did you ring, sah?" repeated the porter, and the nervous mother began to sob.

But the lawyer slept sweetly, one knee, which had restlessly moved against the panel in the night, pressing the button of the electric bell, and it and the baby did the rest.—N. Y. Tribune.

His Name.

The question "What's in a name?" sometimes presents difficulties; but there is a negro in South Carolina who answers it without hesitation, so far as his own case is concerned. He is a middle-aged man, and was pointed out to a stranger by the gentleman in whose employ he is, as a "character." "In what way?" asked the northern visitor. "I'll call him here," replied the other, "and you'll find out what I mean."

"My friend would like to know your name," he said to the colored man when he had summoned him.

"Yes, sah," replied the darky, turning a gleaming smile on the visitor. "My name, sah, is Thomas Cæsar Victor Jubilee Fitzgerald Pompey Swan, K. Q. X., sah!"

"Ah!" ejaculated the northern man, in amazement. "That's a fine name certainly. But what do those three letters at the end stand for—K. Q. X?"

"Well, sah," said the darky, with a still broader smile, "dey don't stand fer nothin', percisely. Y'see 'twas dis way. My young missus dat tole me all de fust book-larnin' dat ever I had, befo' de wah, she larnt me de alph'bet from my own name. It had all de letters in it, jest exceptin' dem tree, K. Q. an' X, and dose she writ after my name.

"I larnt de alph'bet in dat way, an' how to spell my name at de same time; an' dem tree extry letters dat wa'n't in de body ob my name, as you might say, but was added on like, hab fixed demselves so fum in my mind, sah, dat I always speaks an' writes dem jest nach'lly right after Swan, sah!

"Ob course," added this much-named man in a judicial tone, "some folks might say dem letters ain't really necessitous; but it 'pears like as if my parents—what I never knowed, dey bein' sold away from whar I was brung up—come so mighty near gettin' de whole alph'bet in my name, 'tain't no more dan jest respeckful an' gratitudinous to add dem tree, what jest slipped dere minds!"—Youth's Companion.

How He Succeeded in Life.

The man with the self-satisfied air had stopped to speak to a couple of men on the street, and when he had passed one of the men remarked:

"There's a man who has come up in the world rapidly."

"Is he a brilliant man?" asked the other.

"Well, no; at least no one ever thought so."

"He must be a hard worker then."

"No; he doesn't work any harder than he has to."

"Well, I suppose he has a lot of good hard sense, and that makes him valuable."

"He has never shown any evidence of it."

The second man thought the matter over for a moment and then said:

"O, well, some people have a faculty of making others think they are smart men even when they are not."

"He hasn't that to any marked extent. No one considers him a particularly able man."

"What is the secret of his success, then?"

"His ability and readiness to say things reflecting on the work of others. His only hope is to convince people that others do poor work.—Chicago Tribune.

SHE JUMPED AT CONCLUSIONS.

A School-Teacher Has a Good Reason for Doubting Circumstantial Evidence.

"No," said a very prim, angular-looking woman, the very personification of the words "old maid," to a companion on a 3d avenue "L" train, "I don't think Harris should have been convicted."

"Why not?" asked her companion, who looked enough like her to have been a sister, says the N. Y. Advertiser. "I am sure I think he was guilty."

"Well," said the first, "they convicted him on circumstantial evidence and I don't believe in circumstantial evidence after the experience I had with it. Just let me tell you. You know Miss H——, don't you?"

"Oh, yes."

"Well, she came to see me on Wednesday evening about three weeks ago and we had a nice little chat together and made arrangements to go to a concert the next week, and it being quite late before she went we joked some about the late hours we were keeping. Now, just a week from that night, I not having seen her since, sent her a short note, heading it 'My dear friend,' and in the note itself reminded her of the concert, telling her to be sure and call for me and also making some reference to the lovely time we had last Wednesday night, but I didn't sign my full first name but just put J. B——, and in addressing the envelope put my friend's initials in the same way. Well, by some mistake or other that letter got sent to 121 West —— street, instead of 121 East —— street, where it seems there was a family of the same name as my friend.

"The man of the house got it and thrust it into his pocket and there his wife found it and as it happened that he had been out the very Wednesday evening I referred to in my letter she jumped to the conclusion that her husband had been making love to some other woman, and as my address was in the note she rushed around to my flat at —— —— street and raised [illegible] There the speaker's voice sunk to a whisper and her friend looked horrified. All this happened while I was down at the school.

"She wept, told the janitor and the other tenants that I had been stealing her husband and then went out on the sidewalk, called for the police and shrieked and threatened me with all sorts of things, to the great delight of all the neighbors, of course. At last the janitor, to get rid of her, told her I was a teacher in a public school and gave her the number of the school and sent her around to find me and that afternoon she walked into my [illegible] room and asked for Miss B—— just as the principal happened to be in the room, too. Of course I didn't know what was the matter and I said: 'That's my name.' Then she glared at me for about a minute without saying a word and then she said again: 'This is Miss B——?' I said: 'Yes, what do you want?'

"She commenced to abuse me like a pickpocket; said I had stolen her husband and taking a letter from her pocket and holding it up before me said: 'Look, I have the proof,' I said: 'That's a letter I wrote to my friend. How did you get it?' And then she shrieked: 'I am his wife and found it in his pocket,' and then burst into tears.

"I tried to explain but the more I explained the more mixed up I got, but just then who should come in but Miss H—— and between the two of us we convinced the old fool that I had not stolen her husband and had no intention of stealing him and at last she departed, looking as if a world of sorrow had been lifted from her heart, and perhaps it had.

"Of course I told all my friends the facts of the case, but some of the people in the neighborhood—whom I don't know, and therefore cannot explain to—always smile as if they knew an awful lot. I hate such people don't you?"

"Twenty-third street!" yelled the guard, and the two old maids departed, leaving me to ponder upon the uncertainties of circumstantial evidence.

His Memory Was Good.

Ingersoll told a good story to a party of gentlemen who were calling upon him at the Denison two weeks ago. A gentleman entered a street car and took his seat opposite a fine, portly, aristocratic-looking personage whom he at once thought he recognized. He looked hard at the man for a time, until he saw he was causing him considerable discomfiture. He then changed his seat for one beside the handsome-looking man, and as he did so turned to the latter with the remark: "I beg your pardon, sir, for my question, but I am so strongly seized with the impression that we have met before."

The gentleman good-naturedly replied that he, too, thought he had seen the other's face, but was at a loss to tell where.

Both rode on in silence for some blocks, alternately exchanging side glances, but saying never a word. Finally the man who had broached the subject broke out with "Hold on; I have it, sir. Weren't you blown up at the battle of Vicksburg?"

"Yes," replied the other, inquiringly.

"Then that explains it. So was I. When you were going up I was coming down, and I thought as I looked at you then that that fellow would give a good deal to be as near the ground as I am. I knew i had seen your face some place, comrade."

"Now, that is what I call a wonderful memory," said Col. Ingersoll, with a hearty laugh.—Indianapolis Journal.

French Marketing.

French marketing is sketched by Mr. William Henry Bishop in a paper in the Atlantic. He says:

Shrewd insidious or crabbed old women stare hard at you, to throw you into confusion, if possible, by their appreciation of the fact that you are a novice and a stranger. They practice extortion on all hands, and return impudence, or affect to toss back their lettuce or plums into the basket in disdain, if you attempt to bargain. I think no masculine mind, in superior pride of intellect, will be much inclined to smile at the difficulties of mastering all the new qualities and quantities of the received kinds of provisions, and keeping a proper eye out for taking novelties. To estimate in kilogrammes and litres instead of pounds and quarts, and in francs and centimes instead of dollars and cents, is simple enough, I grant you, in cold blood; but to do it under fire, as it were, and know where you are in your economies, is a matter of long and serious practice. Suppose it is suddenly sprung upon you, for instance, that you have eggs to the amount of soixante-dix centimes, mushrooms for quartre-vingt-quinze, and [illegible] hektos of butter at trente-huit the [illegible], will you remember instantly that these are simply fourteen, nine[illegible], and seven and three-fifths cents respectively, and that four hektos is four-tenths of a kilo, which is two and one-tenth pounds? I should very much doubt it. Then, too, the difficulties of language come in. However glib you may be with it, it will not always serve; for the lower order of people, the world over, have a way of mouthing or chopping their words, or changing them into a patois of their own, which render them all but unintelligible.

"Even if you get them to send a written account, it isn't much better," S——was given to complaining, in these days. "They make their figures all alike, and nothing is in the least distinct but the sum total."

However, this is one of the conditions of the problem; it is an ordeal to be met,—the earlier and more bravely the better. A personal acquaintance with price is indispensable as a check, even if the marketing is afterwards to be committed to another. Surely some of the hardships of the campaign are offset, too, by the never-failing supply of humorous episodes that arise, and the bright, bustling character of these market scenes, in which a good part of foreign picturesqueness resides.

One Woman's Way.

She was portly of figure, poor of attire and wealthy of words. This is one way of conveying the idea that she was Irish. You could have cut up her brogue with an axe and had enough to last through a hard winter. She swung by a strap in a crowded elevated car like a rusty bologna in a butcher's window. A saddle tinted gentleman from a warmer climate comfortably reposed in a seat directly in front of her dreaming of the alligators sunning themselves on the muddy banks of the bayous of Louisiana.

"Git up and give me that seat!" said the stout washer lady, kicking the southern dreamer on the shin.

"Wha! Hoo! Ugh! Woo!" cried the startled colored gentleman, grabbing that most vulnerable part of his anatomy and carefully moving it out of her way.

"Ain't you going to give me that seat?" she sweetly inquired, swaying toward him as if getting ready to drop on him.

The movement alarmed the young gentleman in the next seat, and he hastily let go of his tender mustache and rose and politely offered his place.

"Thank you, thank you very much, sir! You're a gentleman, sir, a borned gentleman."

The young man, who had suddenly become the focus of a good many tittering eyes, blushingly acknowledged the compliment, but looked uneasily around for a way out of his embarrassment. She continued at the rate of 250 words a minute:

"I can tell a gentleman every time. I'll lay that you have a good mother, sir, as knows how to bring children up. Bless you, sir, I see the grace of God in your face!"

But somehow the rest of the folks didn't see anything of the sort—only a face as red as a boiled beet, and this they hailed hilariously. While the unhappy youth fairly ploughed his way through the crowded aisle to get out of range the saddle tinted southron smiled a seven-inch smile.—N. Y. Herald.

Happy Ahashuerus.

"When I went to sea," said an old yarn-spinner down on the wharves, "I was very handy aloft and answered to the convenient name of 'Jack.' I was so willing and handy that the officers were always calling upon me. It was 'Jack, do this,' or 'Jack, do that.' On one voyage from Havana to Philadelphia the mates called on 'Jack' so much that I was well-nigh worn out. I determined to be 'Jack' no more. After arriving in Philadelphia and remaining there a few days I went to the shipping commissioner's office for a new job. He said he wanted a man for a captain who was even then waiting in the office and requested me to sign my name.

"'I cannot write,' I said.

"'Then tell me your name,' said he.

"'Ahashuerus Vitz Van Deuzendorff,' I said.

"'What?'

"'Ahashuerus Vitz Van Deuzendorff.'

"'How in thunder do you spell it?'

"'I don't know.'

"'Here, captain,' said the commissioner, turning to the waiting captain, 'this man seems all right but for his confounded name.'

"'That's all right,' said the captain, and I was shipped. And I will tell you I had peace and comfort on that voyage. Whenever the mate wanted me to do anything, he would start on my name, break out swearing, and then tell another man to do the work. I think they rather suspected something wrong about the name, but they never caught me."—Portland Press.

Under Difficulties.

A charity concert was to be given on shipboard, says the author of "A Winter Cruise in Summer Seas," but on the appointed day the wind and sea rose and almost every passenger succumbed to sea-sickness. So rough did it become that men and women lay prone in the cabin, catching at any "visible means of support" in order to escape being hurled against the walls. All day long had the manager of the concert, paper and pencil in hand, been cruising about, interviewing invalids for particulars of the work they proposed doing for the entertainment.

One minute he might be seen, arm about a stay, trying to make a note on a paper, which would suddenly jump up and poke the pencil in his eye. Then he would be grappling with a saloon chair, which would dash at him and fell him to the floor. A little later one might see him and a possible performer brought together in a way to make them bosom enemies.

This concert agent, having by a series of athletic exercises reached the piano, thus addressed the audience:

"Ladies and gentlemen" (here he unexpectedly sat down on the music stool), "I regret to inform you that circumstances over which" (here his head struck the piano) "she has no control deprive us of the pleasure of having Miss——'s song. The doctor tells me also that, Miss—— and her father having this morning fallen down the companion-ladder, the young lady has felt rather below par and must be excused."

Here he clutched at the music on the piano.

"Miss——, who was to have sung 'Put Me in My Little Bed,' finds she has no excuse for the song as she has not yet got up. Mr.—— is present and prepared to play the violin if any gentleman will kindly hold it for him, as he requires one hand to steady himself."

Here he grabbed at a friend's hair.

"The gentlemen down for recitations are all present, but the noise caused by the wind renders reciting difficult, so the captain has lent his speaking trumpet, by the aid of which we hope to be able to hear them."

He then produced the trumpet, at the sight of which an impetuous scramble was made for the doors.—Youth's Companion.

A Noted Virginia Story Teller.

Mr. Thomas Nelson Page, who has recently delighted our ears as much as he had previously delighted our understandings, is not at all the typical Southerner of Northern imagination—tall, spare, slender, dark and fiery-eyed. Instead, he is of the ruddy, well-nourished Virginia type, so dear and familiar to Southern eyes. He is rather above medium height. His face is wonderfully mobile and expressive; there is the most shrewdly humorous twinkle in his eye, and he has a velvety voice, which goes far to explain his wonderful success as a reader. He is absolutely without mannerisms upon the platform. It is simply a well-bred Virginia gentleman telling, with no straining after effect, of Virginia life, Virginia happenings, in the words, the voice of the well-bred Virginia darkey. Mr. Page is about five and thirty. His home is in Richmond, where several years ago his beautiful young wife died after a day's illness. Unlike many of the literary meteors of the Southern sky, Mr. Page goes on from strength to strength, and will certainly take rank as a fixed star of the first magnitude. The Atlantic Monthly ranks him easily first among American short-story writers, and Boston itself went wild over his readings. In fact, it is not too much to say that Mr. Page is the only American writer who could have ventured to read conjointly with that versatile genius, Mr. F. Hopkinson Smith, without finding himself cast into that shadow where the greater glory dims the lesser.—Epoch.

What Dr. Lemon Will Do.

Do you want to know the name of one of the best all-round household doctors, and certainly the cheapest that can be found in any country?

It is Dr. Lemon. Yes, an ordinary, sour, yellow lemon, which you can buy at any grocery for a few cents.

Here are some of the things Dr. Lemon will do for you if you give him a chance:

Squeeze him into a glass of water every morning and drink him with very little sugar. He will keep your stomach in the best of order and never let Mr. Dyspepsia, whom he hates cordially, get into it.

If you have dark hair and it seems to be falling out, cut off a slice of the doctor and rub him on your scalp. He will stop that little trouble promptly.

Squeeze him into a quart of milk and he will give you a mixture to rub on your face night and morning and get a complexion like a princess.

Pour him into an equal quantity of glycerine and rub your hands with the mixture before going to bed. If you don't mind sleeping with gloves on that is better still, and helps the doctor considerably in his task of whitening your hands. In the morning wash your hands thoroughly in warm water and apply the doctor again pure, but only a few drops of him this time. You must not not keep this up too long, or your hands will show such a dazzling whiteness as to make all the other young ladies in the vicinity jealous.

If you have a bad headache cut Dr. Lemon into slices and rub these along your temples. The pain will not be long disappearing—or at least growing easier to bear.

If a bee or insect stings you clap a few drops of the doctor on the spot and you will find yourself the better for it.

If you have a troublesome corn the doctor can be again put to good account by rubbing him on the toe after you have cut away as much as possible of the troublesome intruder.

Besides all this the doctor is always ready to sacrifice himself in the cause of Russian tea—slice him without sugar—or in the preparation of old-fashioned lemonade, than which no drink is more wholesome.

Altogether Dr. Lemon is an individual few people can afford to get along without.—N. Y. Herald.

Was Blue, Tired, And Troubled.

The little woman was blue and looked tired, and of course the neighbors who had dropped in tried to sympathize with her.

The little woman said that she was worn out with sewing and asked the neighbor if she had ever tried to do any sewing on her husband's clothes.

"Why, yes, poor dear," replied the neighbor. "It is hard work, and then no one but a tailor can ever satisfy a man. I worked two days once trying to fix over a coat for my husband and then he only growled and grumbled and took it to a tailor to have it all done over again."

"WHY, YES, POOR DEAR."

"My experience was worse than that," said the little woman sadly. "My husband was always grumbling because he had to go to a tailor for everything, and finally in pure desperation I undertook to put new linings in the sleeves of his overcoat."

"I know, I know," broke in the neighbor. "Awfully hard to make them fit just right, and to get a color that will suit a man."

"Yes, but I consulted him about the color, and then took the old linings out and studied them to see how they were cut. I couldn't have them too loose or too tight, you know."

"Of course not. And when it was all done and you felt that you had earned his thanks, you waited for him to say something that would please you, and he didn't."

"No, he didn't."

"He just growled out that a 5-year-old girl could do as well as that, and that it would all have to be torn out again."

"No; I wish he had. He tried it on, and said that it was fairly well done, and he guessed he'd never have to go to a tailor again for repairs, and he hasn't. That's what makes me so tired today. O, if I only had it to do over again I'd fix it so he couldn't get that coat on."—Chicago Tribune.

A Dead Man's Eyes.

"It was a strange and dreadfully realistic presentiment that the fireman on the engine which killed Rice had last night," went on Bockrath, after a painful pause.

"Since the death of Rice the fireman, try as hard as he may, cannot drive the accident from his mind. It appears vividly before him at all times—on and off duty.

"Last night, after firing up, the fireman remarked to the engineer: 'Danny, I see the eyes of Pat Rice on the track.'

"The engineer tried to allay the fears of the fireman.

"'Danny, it is no use for you to say that,' he replied. 'I see Pat Rice on the track, and I believe that it bodes evil—another accident. I am going up the track.'

"Saying this the fireman jumped from the cab.

"Walking up the track about twenty-five feet he made the dreadful discovery that his presentiment presaging accident was too true. There, with his head resting on the rail, was the body of a prostrate man.

"He was lying in exactly the same way as James Murphy, who was found yesterday afternoon crushed by a flat car and which was 'shot out' by the same engine.

"The man seemed to be in a stupor, and was removed to a position of safety.—Sacramento News.

As it is in Boston.

It was noonday in a busy down-town office, and a Boston Herald reporter was awaiting the return of the manager, when the pretty stenographer went to the telephone, and after the usual parley with Central, called:

"Hello, Charley. Are you busy just now?"

Apparently Charley was not, for she continued: "Oh, yes, I had a lovely time, but don't you think ——."

Here there came a strange pause, and with a pencil she tapped idly on a light piece of board which she had taken from her desk, and was holding before the transmitter.

"A case of wait a minute," thought the eavesdropper, sympathetically; but the pretty girl spoke again, with a laugh:

"I don't believe it, for I heard ——."

Then she began tapping on the board again. Then the reporter caught on. She was telegraphing. So when she returned to her desk he remarked: "I notice you have an original method of telephoning."

"Oh, did you see that? Well, I'll tell you about it, but you must not give it away. You see I can't use the telephone here without every one in the room hearing what I say, and they do say that those girls in the central office listen to the conversations over the wire, and, as Charley and I are both telegraphers, we invented this method of conversation by telephone. Isn't it a great scheme? Not one in the office understands it."

But a young man at an adjacent desk worked a sounder in pantomime and winked at the Herald man.

Woman's World.

A Bit of Actual Experience.

Baby Marian, through an unfortunate train of circumstances, had fallen into a very bad habit. For several weeks her mamma or nurse had been lying down with her until she should fall asleep. Her mamma thought that all of this was a waste of time, and of no advantage to baby, and so concluded the habit must be broken. Accordingly, after a quiet little talk with baby—for babies of one year understand much that is said to them—little Marion is clothed in her night attire and laid in bed, while mamma takes her seat beside her with work in hand.

Then commences a little scene. Baby cries for two straight hours; she becomes very hoarse, and her head is hot and her eyes swollen. Mamma is distressed; grave fears that she will make herself sick crowd upon her anxious heart; she feels almost tempted to yield the point, and other members of the family think she is cruel that she does not. She holds out, however, and at length the little one falls asleep, but sobs and grieves even in slumber.

The following night the same course is pursued by mamma. Little Marian having been once conquered, seems desirous of making the best of the situation, so she shuts her eyes and tries to go to sleep. Being unused to the situation, she does not succeed readily, and tosses and sighs for another two hours, which is even more trying to the fond mother than the experience of the first night. At length she falls asleep from sheer exhaustion. The third evening she sweetly kisses mamma good-night, and gently lies down and is asleep in a very few minutes. The work is done. Many valuable hours have been saved for mamma, and baby has learned a most valuable lesson.—Pacific Health Journal.

Artstic Hygienic Dressing.

It is with great pleasure that we can refer our readers to the marked change that has taken place of late in many prominent circles in regard to the healthful dressing of ladies. It is slowly but surely becoming fashionable to wear articles of clothing that are in accordance with the requirements of physiology and hygiene. Ladies of wealth, culture, and social standing are giving this subject their close attention; still there are thousands who know nothing of the reform in under-garments, who still wear the old-time chemise, drawers, garters, etc.

The agitation of dress reform has set thousands of intellectual women thinking on this subject, to good purpose. All dress reformers agree that, aside from shortening the outer dress to convenient length, and relieving it of unnecessary weight, the essentials of a rational reform in ladies' dress pertain chiefly to the underclothing.

Tight lacing is not the only thing that needs reforming. The mischief done by tight skirt bands is very great, for the reason that tight bands draw down the abdominal organs; consequently, those who abandon the corset, without other reforms, do not receive benefits they might. It is dificult to wear skirts with bands in such a manner as to avoid ill consequences. The very best plan is to have the waist and skirt made together in one garment, so that the weight will be equally distributed and suspended from the shoulders.

The outside dress is still liable to be so fitted, with all the change beneath, as to wholly counteract all the good intended to be derived from it, unless worn loose enough to give full play to, and room for, all the organs of the body. Women would not get tired so easy if they would dress properly, as part of their strength is used in struggling against the weight and tightness of their garments.—Health Journal.

Lima Bean Soup.—One quart of very young Lima beans, one pint of milk, one pint of veal stock, one tablespoonful of butter, two even tablespoonfuls of flour; salt and pepper to taste and yolks of two eggs. Put the beans in a saucepan, cover with boiling water, boil slowly thirty minutes. Drain and press them through a colander. Put the milk on to boil in a farina boiler. Add the beans to the stock. Rub the butter and flour together; add to the boiling milk; stir constantly until it thickens. Now add this to the stock. Let all boil up once, then add the beaten yolks of the eggs.

It is stated that $62,000,000 are annually spent in the United States alone upon cosmetics. Mutton fat enters largely into the composition of some of the most high priced of these articles.

Farm Notes.

Why Eggs Spoil.

Whenever a fertilized egg is raised to a temperature of 92 degrees the hatching process begins, and when the temperature falls much below this point the process ceases. These conditions are found in the warm days and cool evenings of summer. During the long hot day the hatching process is at work; during the cool night it ceases. After three or four alterations of this kind the embryo chick dies and the rotting process begins.

Now, it is evident that if the eggs are not fertilized the hatching will not begin, neither will the rotting, and hence there would be an absence of rotten eggs. The remedy, therefore, is to prevent fertilization of the eggs, and this can be secured by the destruction of the rooster. Every rooster not intended especially for breeding should be killed or sold to the huckster as soon as big enough to eat. Not over one rooster should be be kept on any farm, and that one cooped and mated with not more than 10 hens, and the eggs from those hens should be kept or sold expressly for hatching. The other hens should be kept especially for market and table use, and no rooster should ever be allowed among them. On the ordinary farms about one-tenth of the fowls are roosters, which is about nine times as many as there could be any possible use for.

Unfertilized eggs are much sweeter and better for table use and will keep from two to four times as long as fertilized ones. Hens not kept with roosters will lay longer and set less than others. It is safe to say that in the United States alone there are 20,000,000 roosters and that 19,000,000 of them a rea positive and expensive nuisance, except for the table at the right time. If these roosters were killed and their places supplied with hens, and each hen laid 200 eggs per year, the aggregate would be 3,800,000,000 worth one cent each, $38,000,000, every cent of which would be clear net profit to the farmer.—Farm, Stock and Home.

Springhalt.

In the American Veterinary Review for January appears a paper by W. S. Bryden, V. S., which contains some information of value to horse-owners, and certain suggestions of interest to veterinarians. After giving a detailed statement of a remarkable case cured under his direction, Mr. Bryden says:

"In previous articles on this subject I have pointed out that the successful treatment of this disease depends on whether it first presents itself in a very young animal, or in one that has reached maturity. The young animal, affected with it from its early youth, if allowed to grow up without any effort to arrest or control the defect, will be found most difficult to treat successfully after maturity, as inharmonies in different parts of the leg are not easily regulated; whereas springhalt occurring at maturity or after, if not the result of a permanent injury, is very often quite as amenable to treatment as other erratic or equivocal gaits, such as paddling, interfering, overreaching, hitching, pacing, etc., defects artributable to a similar class of circumstances and surroundings, and composing a family of diseases originating in the brain or spinal cord.

"Whatever part of the hoof crowds in or interferes with will react on some part of the limb above, causing changes, it may be in one or more muscles or parts, so that they act out in harmony. It may disturb a nerve and destroy or modify its influence, changing its gait, or causing lameness. It may cause shortening of such parts as the flexor tendons and ligaments, and the animal walks on his toe, or on the side of his foot. It may induce shortening of the metatarsal flexor and cause it to do more than its share of work, when bone spavin will follow. It may cause shortening and atrophy of the muscle of the hip, and the tail will almost invarably be carried to the shrunken side, instead of the side on which the muscles are strongest. All those diseases of the limbs recognized as peculiar to the horse have their origin there. There we find the predisposing factor. The acquired defective hoof determines the character of the defect in the limb. General Grant, in his letter to Dunbar, indorsed this significance of the influence exerted by the hoof.

"A springhalt gait from any other cause is not springhalt. To class it with chorea, or to imagine it due to changes in the bones of the hock, is nonsense. The changes in the hock and elsewhere are coincident results, not causes."

REPUBLICAN TICKET.

PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT,

HARRISON AND REID

THE Republican convention for the nomination of presidental electors will be held in Sacramento July 26.

THE action of several noted divines in the east in endorsing the Salvation Army has excited a great deal of comment.

THE town trustees have appointed a committee to look into the matter of providing hitching posts for the public.

A GREAT deal is being said in San Francisco about closing out the dives. Talk is cheap. The question is will anything be done.

FOR a man who filled up up his letter of acceptance of a first term with a horrid picture of the dangers to the country of a second term, Cleveland is just now presenting a very undignified picture of a scramble for a third nomination.

THE People's Party in this state have several papers devoted to their cause. It is possible that this party may cut some figure in the coming election. They certainly show vigor in the conduct of their work.

DEMOCRATIC economy is like Artemus Ward's patriotism in wishing to sacrifice all his wife's relations in the service of his country. No Democrat is advocating retrenchment that affects his own district.—Ex.

THE Dispatch Democrat, of Ukiah, gushes over the Republican votes Geary will get in Humboldt, and pats the Del Norte Record and Nerve on the back for supporting him. But it has no word of advice to the Democrats of this county to send a man to the Assembly who will vote for Felton for Senator. Poor rule that wont work both ways.—Arcata Union.

WHEN it comes to voting for supervisors, the people naturally believe that the man who can manage his own affairs successfully is the man to be put in charge of the county's business. The office means responsibility, care and worry. A supervisor's official acts cannot suit everybody. He will certainly darmg his term make some enemies. The salary is scarcely any compensation for the touble and annoyance connected with the office. When a man like A. G. Ruddock consents to run for the office he should receive a solid support. Mr. Ruddock has shown himself to be capable, reliable and energetic. The voters of the first district will elect him by a large majority.

Farmers see the land of Virginia, which has few factories, selling on the average at about $11 an acre, while the poorer land of Pennsylvania, with many factories, brings $49 an acre.

In Mississippi, devoted exclusively to agriculture, land sells for less than six dollars an acre, but brings $42 in sterile, but manufacturing, Massachusetts.

The average in Georgia, where mills are almost unknown, is between $4 and $5 per acre; but in New Jersey, with all its swamps and clay beds, the average value of land is $65.

So the farmers continue, and will continue, to vote for Protection and against Free-Trade, because they do not want to vote away one-half the value of their farms.

And who can blame them for it?—Economist.

The Nicaragua Canal is attracting more attention than ever. The national Republican Convention deemed it of sufficient importance to devote a plank in its platform to it. Congress has passed several acts in relation to it. The importance to the Pacific Coast of its construction cannot be estimated. The shortest distance from San Francisco to New York by water is over 15,600 miles; through the Nicaragua Canal the distance will be less than 5,000 miles. The entire length of the canal from ocean to ocean will be 169 miles; this includes lakes and rivers leaving for the canal proper only 27 miles to be excavated. The total estimated cost is $100,000,000. This seems like an immense sum, but the protectors figure on an annual tonnage of six million tons. Charging the same rates of toll as the Suez Canal, this would bring a gross income of twelve million dollars. But laying aside financial issues there remain economic and international questions of grave importance to be settled before the canal can be regarded as a sure thing.

THE GREAT WORDS OF GREAT MEN.

A Most Remarkable Array of Outspoken Statements from Men of Mark in Both Continents.

INTERESTING FACTS AND FACES.

The orator before the Senate called this "an age of progress." He was wrong. "Progress" does not half express it; it is an age of revolution. Revolution carried on, not by armies, but by discoverers, inventors and brain-workers. It is a marvelous age, an age when the ordinary will not be accepted, when the best is demanded. Our grandfathers were content to travel in stage coaches, to live in cabins and receive a mail once a week. We demand palace cars, tasteful homes and daily communication with the world. It is the rapid-transit age; the age of the telegraph and the telephone. A man speaks to-day and the entire world reads his words to-morrow morning. There are but twenty-four hours in a day, but forty-eight hours are crowded into it.

WILLIAM EDWARD ROBESON, M. R. C. S. L., L. K. Q. C. I.
Late of the Royal Navy of England.

I emphatically state that I have been able to give more relief and effect more cures by the use of Warner's Safe Cure than by all the medicines in the British Pharmacopoeia

Wm Edwd Robson

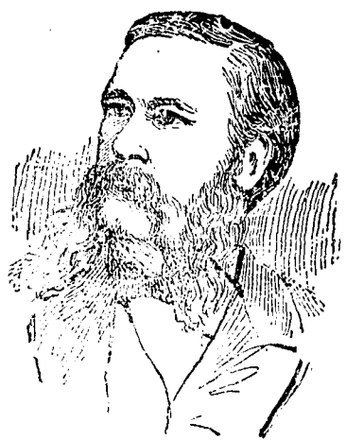
We all know how we have advanced materially. Do we realize how we have advanded scientifically? More than in any other manner. Indeed, it has been the advancement in science which has caused the advancement in material things. The discovery of steam permitted the railroad and the steamboat. The development of electricity made possible the telegraph and the telephone, so that the development of the sciences has been the real cause of all modern advancement.

We will take, for example, one department of science, but the most important department. One which affects our very lives and happiness. Formerly the treatment of human ills was made a matter of superstition, of incantation, the same as it is by the medicine men of the Indians to-day. Gradually emerging from such blindness, it was still a matter of bigotry, of folly. What people must have suffered in those days can scarcely be imagined. They were bled, they were cupped, they were leeched, they were subjected to every device whereby their vitality could be reduced and their lives endangered. It is almost a wonder that the race survived.

There has been an absolute revolution in the practice of medicine and in the treatment of human ills. Instead of undermining the vital forces by cupping and bleeding, the vitality is now sustained in every possible manner. Instead of tearing down we seek to build up. Instead of increasing misery we seek to create happiness.

But the greatest advancement in medical science has been made by discovery. Harvey could afford to endure the ridicule of the world for revealing to it the grand discovery of the circulation of the blood. Jenner might be ostracised, but millions have benefited by his discovery of vaccination. Pasteur lived in a more enlightened age and escaped ridicule, while the world received the benefit which his discoveries have brought. Koch, although forced to reveal his discovery before its perfection, will be revered by future generations.

The discoveries of these great men have been of untold benefit to the world, and yet they were not in the line of the world's greatest need. Mankind has been suffering, enduring, dying from a cause far greater than small-pox, more terrible than hydrophobia and more subtile than consumption. The habits of modern life, the very inventions which have made civilization so great, have drained the vital forces of life and undermined the organs that sustained life.



DR. R. A. GUNN,
Dean of the United States Medical College, New York, and Editor of the Medical Tribune.

I prescribe and use Warner's Safe Cure in both acute and chronic Bright's disease and am willing to acknowledge and commends it most heartily.

R. A. Gunn M.D.

Ten years ago this great truth was realized by a gentleman whose own life was in sore jeopardy, and the discovery which he has given to the world has done and is doing more to-day to strengthen the vitality, lessen suffering, preserve the health and lengthen life than any of the discoveries of the other great men above mentioned. The discovery referred to was made by Mr. H. H. Warner, of Rochester, N. Y., and is known in Europe, in America, and throughout the world as Warner's Safe Cure.

It may perhaps be thought that the above assertion is an extravagant one and so it would be were not the unquestionable proofs present to verify it. Within the past few years the claims made more than ten years ago have been admitted by the highest scientific authorities, both in Europe and America and it is with pleasure that we present herewith some remarkable reproductions of testimonials received from the men who made them.

Kidney troubles, resulting far too often in Bright's disease, are the great evil of modern life. They frequently come silently and unannounced. Their presence far too often is not realized until their treacherous fangs have been fixed upon the vital portion of life. Nothing can be more deceptive, for their symptoms are varied in nearly every instance. Thousands of persons have been their victims without realizing or knowing what it is that afflicted them. Thousands are suffering to-day who do not know the cause. The following outspoken words, however, show what wonderful things this great remedy has done:

GEORGE W. NAANES, M. D., Arney, Ind.: "I am using Warner's SAFE Cure in my practice and find it to be a valuable medicine."

B. G. GARY, M. D., Mound P. O., Kanawha Co., W. Va.: "As a practicing physician I have had occasion to examine closely the remedial effects of Warner's SAFE Cure. So well satisfied have I been with the results that I do not hesitate to recommend it to my patients, especially in disease of the kidneys, where its use has in nearly every case given the desired relief."

DR. DIO LEWIS.

If I found myself the victim of a serious kidney trouble I should at once use Warner's Safe Cure

Dio Lewis

N. C. MURPHY, M. D., Marion, S.C.: "I have tried Warner's SAFE Cure in my practice and find that it acts like a charm."

A. M. COLE, M. D., Peninsula, Ohio: "I have prescribed Warner's SAFE Cure in my professional practice with the best of results."

The discovery made by Mr. H. H. Warner has been acknowledged throughout both hemispheres to be the only discovery for this great modern evil now known to the world. Like all great discoveries, it has had its enemies and met with opposition, but its marvelous popularity with the public has been phenomenal and its complete acknowledgement by scientists and the professions has been deserved. It stands, as it deserves to stand, upon a plane of its own, pre-eminent among all prominent discoveries for the relief of humanity and the promotion of happiness.

A. MARKS' GENERAL MERCHANDISE STORE.

We Show No Prices This Week.

Give this your attention for a few moments and you will observe a few lines of good, hard common sense.

Have you ever dealt with us? If not, why? Did you ever take the trouble to look at our stock? Did it occur to you that the firm doing business on the smallest possible expense was the firm that could sell the best goods for the least money? We conduct our business on economical, but effective methods; attend personally to the wants of our customers. There are certain immutable laws of business everywhere recognized as such. One of these is:

"Large Quantities, Low Prices."

We own the largest general merchandise house in this county, and carry the largest stock of dry goods and clothing in this section of the State. Another law is:

"Cash Makes Lower Prices Than Credit."

We pay cash for our goods, and sell for cash only. All these reasons combined go to show why we can and do sell better goods at lower prices than any other house and prosper. We look carefully after small matters as well as large, and guarantee that if you will give us your trade we will merit it.

$1000 REWARD.

Three days before Noah left the Ark, about half-past 14 o'clock in the morning, a balloon was cut loose from the top of Mount Sanhedrin, containing two small children—twins—one a boy of 36, and the other a girl of 40. The boy wore a long South Pole linen duster, lined with tomato can labels, and a cream color plug hat with the word "star" spelled backwards on the race track. The girl wore a striped penitentiary suit, with a truss of hay for a bustle. Anyone learning of their present abode will confer a great favor on the bereaved parents by keeping still about it. The ascent was made for the purpose of painting on the moon, advertising the famous

SICK

Head-Aches.

Sick-headaches are the outward indications of derangements of the stomach and bowels. As Joy's Vegetable Sarsaparilla, is the only bowel regulating preparation of Sarsaparilla, it is seen why it is the only appropriate Sarsaparilla in sick-headaches. It is not only appropriate, it is an absolute cure. After a course of it an occasional dose at intervals will forever after prevent return.

Jno. M. Cox, of 735 Turk Street, San Francisco, writes: "I have been troubled with attacks of sick-headache for the last three years from one to three times a week. Some time ago I bought two bottles of Joy's Vegetable Sarsaparilla and have only had one attack since and that was on the second day after I began using it."

GENTS—The Queen Plater beat anything I ever saw to make money. When I received it, I put in a brass ring to test it, and to my surprise it was nicely silver plated in five minutes. I made $29.40 the first week and $47.85 the second week plating jewelry and silverware. At the end of the first month I had $197.45 clear profit. I now get all the knives, forks, spoons and jewelry one person can plate without going from home. I will let my son have the plater I now have at home and I am going to sell platers. I sold three to-day for $10 each and done some plating besides. I sent $20 to-day for four more platers. I believe any enterprising person can make a grand success of this business.

Very Respectfully

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The Work of Storms.

A tornado struck Galva, Ill., June 13, wreaking the Methodist church rink, railroad roundhouse and many other buildings and unroofing nearly every building in town.

The path of the tornado was about four miles wide. After leaving Galva the storm took a southeasterly route up Spoon river, doing much damage. From Spoon river to Altoona trees were uprooted, buildings were blown down and other damage was done. A dozen sheep were blown from one man's yard and landed in an adjacent field. Torrence Spoor's windmill was blown away and struck the residence of George Craven 600 yards distant. Craven was riding in a road wagon and was carried by the wind over a fence into a neighboring field. The damage to farms along the path of the storm will amount to thousands of dollars. A strip of country four miles wide and sixteen miles long was devasted.

What appears to have been a tornado passed over the southern end of Bangor, Me., June 14, crossed the river, and went through Brower, destroying and moving several buildings, leveling sheds and doing other damage. Then it visited houses and chimneys on the river bank, after which it descended on the river.

The steam launch Annie, that plies between Bangor and Hampden, had just left the dock with twenty persons aboard. The boat was overturned and sank. Twelve persons were saved and eight lost.

A hailstorm and cyclone swept over the provinces of Quebec, New Brouswick and Nova Scotia June 14, carrying death and disaster.

The cyclone struck three miles to the east of St. Rose, forty miles from Montreal, and demolished a group of farm houses known as Grand Cote St. Rose. The most shocking phrase of the disaster is the destruction of a schoolhouse, in which twenty-five children were being taught at the moment the cyclone struck it. A mass of kindling wood is all that is left of the building.

When the people had somewhat recevered from their terror their first thought was of the schoolhouse, a frame building about two miles from the road. Of the children there was not a trace. The debris was searched in the expectation that some of the little ones might be under the ruins, but none of these were found, and as the parents were notified of the calamity a regular search was instituted for them. Four had escaped entirely being alarmed by the approaching wind. Others were found strewn all about the fields. Two of them were dead when found and one other died early this morning. Twelve others were dangerously injured and the remainder were all more or less wounded. The teacher was found unconscious about twenty-five feet distant. Her desk was carried over a mile away. She was in a dangerous condition.

Buildings were destroyed, cattle killed and havoc wrought over a great area, several other schoolhouses being wrecked and a number of children killed.

Southern and central Minnesota were visited by a terrific storm of wind and rain June 15. A hundred people were killed and dwellings, schoolhouses and other buildings were reduced to kindling wood.

The Venezuelan Revolution.

Repeated disasters sustained by his troops and the near approach of Crespo to Caracas have at last forced Dictator Palacio of Venezuela to resign. He went into hiding and the cabinet appointed Minister of War Sarria provisional president and announced that congress would be convened to elect a president.

This did not satisfy the revolutionsts, who declared that the existing congress was filled with men who had not been elected and that a new congress must be elected which shoule choose a president. Crespo continued his march on the capital.

The running out habit, which is supposed to belong to the potato, and which is in fact the result of maltreatment—may be entirely avoided by using the best seed and growing on good soil, with wide spaces between hills, with single stalks. If the most is to be made out of the potato crop the seed must be improved—not one season only, but a continuous effort must be made each season, and if this is done "millions" may be saved in obtaining new seed after the old has run out, at least so says E. S. Teagarden in Nebraska Farmer.

SHRIMPS AND ABALONES.

They are Caught in Multitudes on the Pacific Coast by Chinamen.

"There are some very curious fisheries carried on by the Chinese on the Pacific coast," said an officer of the United States Fish Commission to a Washington Sun writer. "One of the most remarkable is the catching of shrimps, which is an important industry in San Francisco bay and adjacent waters. These little crustaceans, upon being captured, are taken ashore and boiled in big iron vats after a rude fashion, holes being scooped out of the side of a steep bank for fireplaces, which are built up with stones. After the shrimps have remained in boiling water for ten minutes they are spread out to dry upon bare ground. One such shrimp yard at Hunter's Point is about fifteen acres in extent. The Chinese use brooms shaped somewhat like hoes for spreading the shrimps and to turn them at the required intervals.

"After being thoroughly dried by exposure to the sun for about five days the shrimps are crushed by being trodden upon by the Chinamen in wooden shoes. This process loosens the meat from the shells, which latter are removed by shaking in a basket or by passing them through a crude fanning-mill. Both meats and shells are then packed in sacks for exportation to China, where the meats are sold for food and the shells disposed of as a fertilizer for tea plants, rice, and so forth. All classes of people in China eat the meats, although regarding them as inferior to the native shrimps, which are comparatively scarce and proportionately dearer. Both meats and shells are fed to fowls, with remarkable egg-producing results.

"Another interesting fishery prosecuted by the Chinese on the Pacific coast is for abalones. These beautiful univalve mollusks are found along the rocky shores at low tide, clinging to the rocks above the water line. Each shell is slightly lifted, so that the fisherman can thrust a stick under it and pry it off; but, if alarmed, the animal shuts down its valve, so that it can only be removed by breaking it to pieces. The meats are taken from the shells and boiled on shore in vats made of sheet iron. Shells and meats are then packed in sacks and forwarded to San Francisco, whence most of the meats are exported to China and the shells shipped to France, the latter being highly valued for their beautiful mother-of-pearl."

SHE THOUGHT HE MUST BE LONELY.

He Found New York Different in Many Ways from Home.

A young man fresh from the country came to New York about a month ago to seek his fortune, says the N. Y. Tribune. He had just $100 in cash left when he found a boarding-place and had his modest trunk carried up to his hall bedroom. Being frugal he deposited $95 of this in a saving bank downtown. This bank does a large business among poor people and its clerks are not any too polite, probably because they are badgered all day long by ignorant depositors who are afraid the cashier is going to run away if they don't come around every day or two to make sure that their money is there yet.

The young man soon discovered that New York is an expensive city to live in. Five dollars would have lasted a long time for ordinary expenses in his native village, but in New York it melted away in his pocket like a snowball. It reminded him of the Scotchman who had visited the capital of England to see the sights and who on his return, in endeavoring to describe to his friends the great cost of living there, said:

"I had na been in Lunnon five hours when bang went saxpence!"

The young Vermonter, not having secured a situation, soon found it necessary to draw from his little fund in the bank. He got into position in the long line of depositors and when his turn came asked for $12 in small bills. It was handed out to him, and as there were so many people waiting behind him he did not stop to count the money till he got away from the teller's window. He quickly saw that the man had made a mistake. Going up to the window again, he spoke over the heads of the others and told the clerk he had made an error in counting the bills.

The teller was angry. Flushing and glaring, he shouted: "Can't you read? See that sign: 'Customers must count their money before leaving the window, otherwise mistakes will not be rectified.'"

A little indignant at the teller's manner, the young man began again: "But the mistake——"

"I make no mistakes," blurted out the angry teller, interrupting the other. "Get out of the way; you're delaying business."

"But you gave me $1 too much!" yelled the Vermonter, now thoroughly angry.

"Oh, ah!" gulped the teller. "In that case, of course—thank you!" and he grabbed the returned bill. All eyes were fastened on the young man at once. As he was going out a garrulous old woman who spread an aroma of gin all about her said to him:

"Young man, ain't you mighty lonely in New York?"

He Had Found it Hard Work.

He dropped into an armchair and closed his eyes, apparently utterly exhausted.

"Been working hard?" inquired a friend who had dropped in to see him.

"Working hard!" he returned. "I've done three days' work in two hours."

"Splitting wood?"

"No, indeed."

"Putting in coal, perhaps?"

"O, no."

"Haven't been trying to clean a stove pipe, have you?"

"No, sir. I pay a man to do that."

"Then what have you been doing?"

"Well, you know that boy of mine?"

"You mean Willie?"

"Yes."

"O, yes. Bright boy he is, too. What's he got to do with it?"

"Everything, sir, everything! I've been trying to get fifteen minutes work out of him."—Chicago Tribune.

Saved a Town by Laughter.

It was in 1868, after a battle, and the streets of Madrid were filled with angry crowds bent on destroying everything and everybody. Suddenly an unknown man, tall and dark and strong, appeared at the city hall.

"Give me a band of musicians," he said, "and before nightfall I shall control all Madrid." He must have been a man of rare personality to have been able to persuade the authorities at all in that dark hour to give him anything of the kind, but he did.

Going out with the musicians, he wandered through the town. While they played he sung—folk-songs or some national air. When these bored the people he mounted old boxes and told funny stories, and by and by the people forgot to be angry and followed their new leader wherever he went, laughing over his stories and songs.

By nightfall peace reigned in the city, and the mob broke up and went home to bed. The man's name was Felipe Ducazel, and he was only 22 years old when he did this clever thing.

We hear a great deal about heroic things in saving countries by long and terrible rides at night, or by the sacrifice of one's self by dying in somebody's stead, but few of us remember before of any one who saved a town by laughter.—Exchange.

The Elder's Sermon.

Our elder told us yesterday we had not learned to live
Until we learned how blessed 'tis to pardon and forgive.
The dear, sweet, precious words he spake like heavenly manna fell;
The perfect peace they brought our hearts no human words can tell.

"Love begins millennial peace," he said; and though my lips were dumb,
I still kept shouting in my soul, "Amen, and let it come."
"When men forgive all other men the year of jubilee
Will dawn upon the world," he said; I said, "So let it be."

"So love your neighbor as yourself," he then began again,
And Silas Fitz, across the aisle, he shouted out, "Amen."
What right had he to yell "Amen," the low-toned, measly hound!
Who took my cow, my new milch cow, and locked her in the pound!

The low-down raw-boned, homely crank, a lank-head and a lout,
Whose love and grace and heart and soul have all been rusted out—
To sit there in the sanctuary and holler out "Amen."
If I could choke the rascal once he'd never shout again!

One day his dog came by my house, I called the brute inside,
Gave him a chunk of meat to eat and he crawled off and died.
He just crawled off and died right then. Says I, "I'll let him see,
No one-legged simpleton like him can get the best of me."

But, O, that sermon—I would love to hear it preached again,
About forgiveness, charity, and love of fellowmen.
I should have felt as if I basked in heaven's especial smile,
If that blasted villain, Silas Fitz, hadn't sat across the aisle.

HOW HE WON HER.

Toward the close of an autumn day the gallant ship Columbia was standing in toward the Atlantic coast. Her rusty chains and weather-beaten sides gave ample proof that her voyage had been a very long one. Land was not yet in sight but the captain said it would be spoken within twenty-four hours and his passengers were in the highest spirits.

These were but three in number. A gentleman somewhat advanced in years, his daughter, a beautiful girl of 19, and Mrs. Beaumont, her companion. They were now grouped together on the quarter-deck, admiring the autumn sunset. A thin, golden mist veiled the sky, assuming toward the west a soft green tinge and changing into a deep and glowing purple, crossed by streaks of brilliant crimson, in the immediate vicinity of the sun.

"How beautiful!" exclaimed Miss Hazelton. "Did you ever see such a sight, father?"

"It is indeed lovely," said Miss Beaumont. "And yet, glorious as is this spectacle, my dear, I fear it portends no good. The last time I crossed the ocean an evening just like this ushered in a fearful tempest."

Miss Hazelton's face lost its gayety and she looked inquiringly at her father.

"Mrs. Beaumont is right," he said. "I do not like the golden haze nor that bank of crimson clouds which you think so beautiful. We shall certainly have a gale before morning. But there is nothing to fear. Our ship is stanch and new and the captain an experienced officer; the worst thing that can happen is a delay in entering port. As it looks now we may not reach Boston to-morrow."

"I hope you are mistaken, Mr. Hazelton," said the captain, approaching at that moment. "We are only a few hours' sail from the city and the gale may favor our passage."

"A father is more timid than one of your profession, captain," said Mr. Hazelton, and he drew his daughter near him and kissed her forehead.

"I should be anxious, too, replied the other, "if I foresaw danger. But you may continue to watch the sunset without fear. I do not think there will be much of a storm."

The party continued on the quarter-deck until after dusk. Slowly the sun sank and yet, long after his disappearance, the western horizon continued to blaze with splendor. Gradually this faded away and masses of dark gray clouds covered the sky. The air grew damp and chilly and the wind came in moaning gusts.

At about 11 in the evening Mary Hazelton, who had retired early was awakened by the rapid tread of feet overhead the creaking of blocks and the shouts of the officers. She arose and dressed quickly. At the door of her state-room she met Mrs. Beaumont, who had come to seek her.

"What can be the matter?" asked Mary. "Where is my father?"

"He has gone on deck, my dear. There is a terrible storm and the ship is in great peril."

At this moment Mr. Hazelton appeared. His clothes were covered with brine. As he entered the cabin the ship gave a sudden turn, then quivered in every timber and a torrent of water poured down the companion-way. Both women screamed with fright.

"Oh, father, is there any danger?" cried Mary.

"I am afraid so, dear. We are nearer the shore than we thought and there are breakers ahead. If we cannot keep clear of them we are lost."

Mary grew deadly pale but did not speak.

"The captain is doing all he can," continued Mr. Hazelton. "Our ship is a stout craft and carries her sail nobly. If nothing overhead gives way we shall escape."

An hour passed. The gale had not abated and the struggles of the ship were by no means lessened. Every now and then a gigantic wave struck it with fearful force. Suddenly a crack like a clap of thunder was heard,

"What can that be?" cried Mary, as the ship plunged desperately to leeward.

"It is the foretopsail. I fear, torn to ribbons. God preserve us!" said Mr. Hazelton, rushing on deck.

Mary hesitated a moment and then followed him. She looked instantly toward the foremast. The sail was in shreds. Clinging to a railing, she looked eagerly around. The night was still dark, but she could see distinctly close under their lee, a long line of breakers, where the huge waves boiled and foamed.

Presently Mr. Hazelton returned.

"Mary, my child," he said, solemnly, "I fear there is no hope. We must surely strike in a few moments. Where is Mrs. Beaumont?"

"Here, sir," answered that lady faintly. She had kept close to Mary, and was paralyzed with terror.

"Let us remain together as long as we can," continued Mr. Hazelton, "and await the end with courage. It cannot be far off."

* * * * * * *

At this very hour two young men sat in the parlor of the Marysville inn. A fire blazed in the grate, a bottle of not indifferent wine stood on the table beside them and a cloud of smoke rose from their fragrant cheroots.

"A bad night, Graham," said one. "How the wind rattles these windows! I tell you if you had not known of this little fishing village we should have had rough riding to Crampton."

"Oh, I am acquainted with every nook in the vicinity. The people, I see, do not recognize me, but when a boy I used to be here every summer. Many's the wild duck have I brought down in the salt marsh a mile below the village. Hello! What's that?"

He arose to his feet excitedly.

"That was a gun, surely. God help the ship that goes ashore to-night!"

The young men listened and could hear distinctly the boom of the cannon repeated again and again at intervals. It was a strange and startling sound and bore to the listeners' ears a tale of peril—of death, perhaps. Graham seized his hat and started toward the door.

"Where are you going?" asked his friend.

"To see if any aid can be rendered. Come along."

"What nonsense, Graham! We can do nothing. The shoremen will help the shipwrecked people. You must be less tired than I am if you prefer the rain outside to this warm fire."

Graham turned back and faced his friend.

"Arthur Hazelton," said he in an earnest tone, "suppose you knew that there were friends of yours on board? Would you sit here and let them perish? I know these shoremen; they are brave, but they need a leader. What if you were to stay here and learn to-morrow that your sister and father had been in deadly peril?"

"Good heavens! you alarm me!" Hazelton exclaimed, rising. "But they cannot be in that ship. It is several hundred miles out of their way."

"There may be those aboard who are as dear to others as your sister is to you, and I for one will do what I can to save them. If you are of the same mind, Hazelton, hasten."

"Well, since you put it that way, I'll come," said his friend, and he followed his companion without further words.

When they arrived at the beach they found a crowd of fishermen already there.

"Has the vessel struck yet?" asked Graham, addressing a person near him. "I do not hear her guns."

"We heard them a moment ago. Ah! there is one now."

As he spoke the distinct report of a cannon came apparently from a short distance in front of them.

"They are not all lost yet," said Graham. "Where is the life boat that used to be here?"

"You have been in these parts before, I see," said the man. "But, heaven bless you! You don't know much of the coast or you wouldn't propose going off to the wreck on a night like this."

"I know it is perilous," replied Graham, "but I have resolved to make the trial. Surely some of you who have braved so many storms will come with me."

"It is because we are accustomed to the danger of such storms," said an old salt, "that we hang back. Bravery is bravery, but foolhardiness is not courage."

"The man is right, Roy," said Hazelton, earnestly. "No one is justified in throwing his life away."

"Even you will not help me, then?" cried Graham.

"No—such an undertaking as you propose is suicide—neither more nor less."

Graham turned abruptly to the fisherman.

"Where is the life boat?" he asked.

"In the shed yonder. It's been so long out of use that it is unseaworthy. Take an old man's advice and don't tempt Providence."

"I am resolved to reach the wreck, and I will give $50 to every man who will come with me. Will none of you try?"

For a moment there was silence; at length some one said:

"You are liberal, sir, but money can't buy us. If we go at all we'll go for nothing. But we've wives and families. Besides, if that ship has struck on Deadman's shoal she's gone to pieces before this. We haven't heard a gun these five minutes."

"Good God!" said Graham, "what am I to do? Arthur, come with me! I feel sure you will regret it if you do not. Say you will, old fellow. Your example will inspire the rest."

"Then I will!" cried Hazelton, touched by his friend's earnestness.

"Thank God! Who comes with us?"

Several of the young men in the crowd came forward and volunteered their services.

"Now let us be off," said Graham when the life boat was pulled onto the beach. "Are you all ready?"

"Ay, ay," was the answer, every eye turned toward the brave young man.

He gave the word, and off into darkness, the boat shot; the men sprang to their work, and after a short struggle she breasted the waves and made her way out to sea.

* * * * * * *

Deadman's shoal was a bar of considerable extent, placed in the confluence of two currents, and celebrated for the number and fatal character of its shipwrecks. Few vessels that struck upon it were able to hold together through the night; they generally went to pieces in less than an hour.

When the Columbia grounded it was with a jar that lifted the sailors from their feet and snapped the foremast off like a pipestem, close to the deck. A gun was fired just as they were driven on the bar, and immediately afterward the stern, with the majority of the crew, disappeared in the wild vortex of waters.

The fore part of the vessel still remained together and on this were gathered the passengers, a few sailors and the captain.

"How long do you think this will last?" said Mr. Hazelton, addressing the latter.

"Not long—possibly not five minutes."

"Let me hide my face on your shoulder, papa," said Mary, who had conducted herself like a heroine till now. "I am not afraid of death, but I cannot bear to see it coming."

"My poor darling!" he answered, tenderly clasping her in his arms. "How little we thought of this a few short hours ago!"

Ten minutes went by. The wind still blew with violence. Now and then a gigantic wave came in toward the ship, its vast point rising over all around, towering higher as it approached, until finally it plunged upon the wreck, almost burying it for a moment, each shock of this kind threatening to be the last. Suddenly Mary raised her head from her father's bosom.

"Hark! Did you not hear a human voice?" she cried.

The captain listened, but could hear nothing. Raising his hand to his mouth, he shouted:

"Hel-lo-o! Hello!"

"Ahoy!" came faintly up the wind.

"Hello! Hello!" shouted the captain again.

"Ahoy—ahoy!" came back in reply, clearly and distinctly. There was no longer any doubt. Help was at hand.

"God be praised!" said the captain. "A life boat is coming to take us off."

"You are saved, my darling!" exclaimed Mr. Hazelton, embracing his daughter.

Mary said nothing, but her lips moved in silent thanksgiving.

The boat soon came in sight. Graham stood well forward, directing his men and shouting words of encouragement to the people he had come to save, and in a few moments, gaining courage from his example, all were safe on board, although the transfer was made with no little difficulty and danger.

What was the astonishment of young Hazelton when he found it was his own sister and father who had been rescued! His heart smote him as he remembered that but for Graham's persistence he would have remained on shore.

With difficulty the life boat reached land; no craft less buoyant could have survived that night; but it seemed as though Providence rewarded the gallant crew by bringing them safely home again.

One more item and our story is told.

Love, says the old adage, often springs from gratitude; it must have been so in this case, for barely a twelvemonth after Roy Graham and Mary Hazelton became husband and wife; and they are the happiest pair in the world.—Exchange.

NO TIME FOR HEROES.

One of the Phases of New York's Daily Homeward Rush from Work.

The heartlessness of the hurry that characterizes New York was illustrated sharply by an incident that I witnessed on Broadway, near Eighteenth street, at dusk yesterday afternoon, says a writer in the N. Y. Herald. Teamsters and teams, men, boys and shopgirls were rushing homeward and the confusion was enough to paralyze such as me, for I had just returned from six months of quiet and peace in the primitive woods.

Suddenly I was forced against a wall by a lot of people swerving out of the way of a runaway cab-horse. For a passing instant the noise was intensified and perhaps a score of the hurrying boys broke into a run to see what damage the horse would do farther uptown. Then the normal movement of the human stream was resumed and I, stemming the tide, made my way on down-street. At the next corner I saw a stalwart German leaning for support against a jeweler's window. The horse had run against him and one side of his face was lacerated and covered with blood. He was moaning with pain but the passers-by vouchsafed only to stare at him so long as they could see without stopping. He was too much hurt to notice my offer to conduct him to the New York hospital, which was not far away. So I hastened to the next corner for a policeman and was lucky enough to find one.

By the time the policeman came up half a dozen men and women had gathered around the sufferer.

"What's the matter here?" asked the bluecoat, although I had, of course, told him the facts.

"This man's had a fight," said one of the bystanders.

"Oh, he has, has he!" muttered the policeman, scornfully. "Well, where's the other fellow?"

"Gone on up the street."

With a grin the policeman took the wounded man by the arm and led him off toward the hospital.

I followed across the street and, merely for curiosity, asked one of the lookers-on what had happened.

"Oh, nothing, except the fellow resisted and got a taste of the club, that's all."

Then I went on to the hospital and heard the sufferer's explanation. He had tried to stop the runaway horse and had been struck by the footboard of the cab.

If a man wants to do anything heroic in New York he should have his own witnesses with him. The chance spectator never has any time to stop and explain to inquirers.

River Channel in a Sound.

In Long Island Sound, not far from the north shore of the island, is clearly defined the channel of an ancient river. As shown by the United States coast survey, it is a gorge, having a depth of about sixty feet below the general flow of the sound on either side of it. The gorge, or channel, was cut into the bedrock of gneiss, the erosion of which is exceedingly low.

The Work of Storms.

A tornado struck Galva, Ill., June 13, wreaking the Methodist church rink, railroad roundhouse and many other buildings and unroofing nearly every building in town.

The path of the tornado was about four miles wide. After leaving Galva the storm took a southeasterly route up Spoon river, doing much damage. From Spoon river to Altoona trees were uprooted, buildings were blown down and other damage was done. A dozen sheep were blown from one man's yard and landed in an adjacent field. Torrence Spoor's windmill was blown away and struck the residence of George Craven 600 yards distant. Craven was riding in a road wagon and was carried by the wind over a fence into a neighboring field. The damage to farms along the path of the storm will amount to thousands of dollars. A strip of country four miles wide and sixteen miles long was devasted.

What appears to have been a tornado passed over the southern end of Bangor, Me., June 14, crossed the river, and went through Brower, destroying and moving several buildings, leveling sheds and doing other damage. Then it visited houses and chimneys on the river bank, after which it descended on the river.

The steam launch Annie, that plies between Bangor and Hampden, had just left the dock with twenty persons aboard. The boat was overturned and sank. Twelve persons were saved and eight lost.

A hailstorm and cyclone swept over the provinces of Quebec, New Brouswick and Nova Scotia June 14, carrying death and disaster.

The cyclone struck three miles to the east of St. Rose, forty miles from Montreal, and demolished a group of farm houses known as Grand Cote St. Rose. The most shocking phrase of the disaster is the destruction of a schoolhouse, in which twenty-five children were being taught at the moment the cyclone struck it. A mass of kindling wood is all that is left of the building.

When the people had somewhat recevered from their terror their first thought was of the schoolhouse, a frame building about two miles from the road. Of the children there was not a trace. The debris was searched in the expectation that some of the little ones might be under the ruins, but none of these were found, and as the parents were notified of the calamity a regular search was instituted for them. Four had escaped entirely being alarmed by the approaching wind. Others were found strewn all about the fields. Two of them were dead when found and one other died early this morning. Twelve others were dangerously injured and the remainder were all more or less wounded. The teacher was found unconscious about twenty-five feet distant. Her desk was carried over a mile away. She was in a dangerous condition.

Buildings were destroyed, cattle killed and havoc wrought over a great area, several other schoolhouses being wrecked and a number of children killed.

Southern and central Minnesota were visited by a terrific storm of wind and rain June 15. A hundred people were killed and dwellings, schoolhouses and other buildings were reduced to kindling wood.

Labor Unions and Strikes

The Carnegie Steel company has ordered a cut of from 15 to 50 per cent in wages. A general strike involving 100,000 men is probable.

Gladstone told a labor delegation that the home-rule movement would occupy the remainder of his days and that the matter of eight-hour legislation was not for him but for those who would come after him.

The trouble between the New York Tribune and the priniers' union has been settled and the Tribune office is now a union office. Its typesetting is done by machinery.

At Macon, Mo., 300 miners are on a strike against monthly payment

The San Jose carpenters' union voted down a resolution favoring Sunday opening of the world's fair

The Minnesota mine at Tower, Minn., was closed by a strike 17 because the surface men's wages has been reduced 10 per cent. Several hundred men were thrown work, the shafts flooded and ore trains tied up.

A 5-inch "Ad"
is not room enough to even mention briefly the scores of resorts throughout California.

In MOUNTAINS we have between Shasta on the north and San Jacinto on the South the myriad of peaks of the Sierras and Coast Range.

In LAKES there are scores, from the little glacier cups to the great inland seas of Tahoe, Clear and Tulare.

In MINERAL SPRINGS we have hundreds that cure all sorts of ailments.

In SEASIDE RESORTS there are scattered along the coast at convenient intervals; enough sea-bathing and recuperating establishments to accommodate all inland leisure seekers.

There is therefore no lack of variety, and no excuse for the dweller by the sea in not making a tour into the mountain, or the dweller in the inland valleys and mountains in not seeking a journey to the sea.

The total sum of these remarks is that YOU READER need a change; you can better afford to than not. MARK THIS. That you can take your choice of localities and you may be breaking some of the commandments if you do not attend to this matter.
